

Readme – PA4

I created a cache structure which contains a tag, index, offset, and pointer to the next to simulate associativity. Then I used a hash table of caches to simulate cache.

Cache A has a better hit ratio, because the index is in the middle, there is more variety and less collision in the same set. Cache B is more likely to have index = 0 since the index starts on the most significant bits.